

Documenting Hoof Rehabilitation

Alicia Harlov will share some helpful tips on how to properly document your hoof rehabilitation cases. Documenting these cases is important to discuss progress with the client and veterinarian. Alicia will go over various topics such as organization, photo documentation, and note taking.

Streamlining photo and video skills will help you notice the changes occurring that the naked eye sometimes does not see.

Additionally, you will learn to document management changes which will help you and your client decide what may be helping or hindering positive progress in a case.

Improving your organization and documentation skills can not only help build your portfolio but can help when dealing with a veterinarian that may not understand your methodology. And if you feel like you are not making progress, you can refer back and see where you started with a case.
